

Why Camp John Marc?

-  Give! Working at Camp John Marc directly benefits children and provides them with a week at camp that might not be otherwise possible elsewhere. CJM believes it camp should be a minimal cost for families; each family only pays a fraction of the actual cost of a week of camp for their child.
-  Leadership! Staffing at Camp John Marc is not to be taken lightly. Leading activities, managing responsibilities, and learning skills are part of how camp can hone the leader in each of us.
-  Relationships! Camp is a wonderful place to meet other college students and young adults to form lasting friendships.
-  Experience! If you're on track to pursue a career working with children or in the medical field, camp is a perfect place to gain experience working with different diagnoses. Scores of pre-med and medical students have worked summers at camp to gain perspective and direction for the paths they choose.
-  Joy! Making a child laugh, seeing a child succeed, and seeing the fruits of your labor all help to make working at a camp a fulfilling and life-giving experience.

Take a look at what former summer staffers have said about their experiences at Camp John Marc...

"It is one thing to enjoy the science of medicine, but camp reminds you that doctors are servants. Each day at camp, you don't see a diagnosis, you see a child. The rigors of medicine are easily dwarfed by a desire to help improve their lives. I'm thankful for the impact camp has had on my life, and I know I will be a better physician for it."

--Zak Vest, a 4th-year medical student at the University of Texas Southwestern Medical School

"Working on the summer Staff at Camp John Marc, I learned what it means to live passionately. The campers challenged me to play and laugh harder, while the other Staff members showed me how to work harder. But most importantly, the people of Camp John Marc showered me with encouragement and taught me how to love without limitations."

--Megan White, a junior studying theology at the University of Notre Dame
